AM/PM Program keeps children busy after school

School's out for the day and many students rush home for an afternoon snack or continue on to daycare. Some, however, stay right at their schools and participate in the Davis-Grossmont YMCA After-School Program AM/PM (ASP AM/PM).

The Davis-Grossmont YMCA became involved when they applied for a grant to subsidize low-income families and the Lemon Grove School District asked the YMCA to run their after-school program. "Each site has a full-time supervisor with a certain minimum of child development units or equivalent experience," said Debbie Macdonald, the Davis-Grossmont YMCA's Child Care Director. "Most of the supervisors are college students majoring in child development, recreation or physical education."

The full-time program is designed to be recreational and is fully booked for the year, at 250 students spread throughout the six sites. "We're very pleased that the programs are full," said Macdonald, "because that means we're really filling a need in the community."

The cost is $1500 per year for kindergarten students and $1400 per year for students older than kindergarten.

The after-school program gives children a safe place to enjoy recreational activities such as arts, crafts, sports, board games, wood working, cooking projects and some field trips, said Macdonald. "We give them some homework time, but we like to keep it as recreational as possible," she added.

Tim Robitz a member of the YMCA's after school team is majoring in Physical Education at San Diego State University and splits his week between two schools, spending afternoons at Vista La Mesa and Golden Avenue Elementary Schools. "I really enjoy it," he said. "It's giving kids something to do to keep out of trouble and we teach them social skills, like manners, sharing, how to treat older people--things they might not get to spend a lot of time learning anywhere else."

The children participate in fun activities that help them learn skills they will need in the future, said a supervisor, Desiree Chappelle. "We have activities like 'share day' so they can get to know each other and feel more comfortable. It also helps them get over their fear of speaking in front of a group," she said.

The after-school program operates from 8:30 in the morning until 6:30 in the evening.

Parents hoping to enroll their children in the program may place them on a waiting list by contacting their children's school office

Lemon Grove City Council amends zoning codes to allow rear wall signs

by Lisa Parsons

The Lemon Grove City Council voted to amend the City zoning code regarding rear wall signs at its regular Tuesday night meeting.

Lemon Grove resident John Wood questioned the Council's decision saying, "You've banned billboards and overhead signs. What's the point of this amendment if you're trying to get rid of visual pollution?"

Only business that abut either a second street or an alley would be allowed rear signs. Councilman Brian Cochran explained that the Council's decision was based on the City's plan to build a parking lot behind Broadway and the hope that shoppers using this parking lot will be able to use rear access to these businesses. The signs on the rear walls will be small identification signs to aid shoppers in finding a business.

The Council also voted to amend a zoning ordinance to eliminate the requirement for a minor use permit in a case where a residential use is non-conforming because of failure to conform to building setbacks. The permit, which dealt with alterations, enlargements, extensions or additions to single family dwellings, was considered by Council and City Staff to be of insufficient public value to warrant the effort required to obtain it.

The council agreed to another possible amendment to the zoning ordinance of the General Plan Landuse Map regarding property south of Lemon Avenue from Olive to Buena Vista. Agostino Zolezzi, a property owner requested the amendment to change the designation of the property from residential/professional to general commercial.

In other business, Mayor Jim Dorman declared the month of September Security Professional Month in Lemon Grove.

Drug related crimes on the rise

The San Diego Association of Governments (SANDAG) reports arrests for drug violations soared 60 percent from 185 to 1989, although the total number of adult and juvenile arrests overall increased only 5 percent region-wide during the same time period.

SANDAG's Criminal Justice Research Unit, which analyzes crime trends, found that felony drug arrests rose 110 percent from 1985 to 1989 and accounted for 46 percent of all drug arrests in 1989.

Misdemeanor drug arrests increased 33 percent for the same period.

SANDAG, working with the National Institute of Justice, has conducted quarterly drug testing of arrestees booked into local detention facilities since 1987. The testing is known as the Drug Use Forecasting program (DUF).

At the program's inception, 66 percent of adult males arrested regionwide tested positive for drug use. Since January of 1988, eight out of ten adult males arrested showed positive results. For males, 82 percent of those charged with property offenses such as burglary, motor vehicle theft and larceny were drug-positive.

In addition, SANDAG findings reveal that San Diego has the highest percentage of drug use among male arrestees. San Diego also outpaced the other cities with the highest rate of multiple drug use.

Other statistics published by SANDAG in a report entitled, "Crime in the San Diego Region," show the overall rate of serious crimes increased only one percent regionwide during the first six months of 1990 when compared to the same period in 1989. Serious crimes are homicide, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny theft and motor vehicle theft.

During the first half of 1990, the violent crime rate rose from 7.1 per 1,000 residents in 1989 to 8.1, a 14 percent increase, numerically, the number of reported violent crimes rose from 8,528 in 1989 to 10,108 in 1990, a 19 percent increase.

SANDAG's crime analysis reveals the homicide rate remained the same for the first half of 1990 when compared to the same period in 1989, while other violent offenses such as aggravated assault and forcible rape increased 33 percent and 16 percent regionwide.

The property crime rate countywide dropped slightly from 1989 to 1990 (less than one percent), with several areas reporting increases.

Despite a slight increase in number, the motor vehicle theft rate dropped 3 percent from 1989 to 1990. This is the first decrease reported in several years.

In comparing San Diego's crime rate among the five most populated counties in California, San Diego County had the largest increase, 29 percent, in the crime rate from 1985 to 1989.

City of Lemon Grove Staff Profiles

by Lisa Parsons

James Butler, a long time resident of the East County, said one of his primary responsibilities as Community Development Director is to coordinate long range planning in Lemon Grove.

"It's my job to preserve what people have come to expect in Lemon Grove--it's rural character and community spirit," said Butler, who has been employed by the City since its early days of incorporation.

Butler, a San Diego native and graduate of Grossmont High School, had planned on being a school teacher when he majored in History at San Diego State University, but when he made some new friends who were involved in urban planning and sparked his interest, he decided that is what he would get his graduate degree in. He interned with the City of San Diego and landed his first job in Imperial Beach, where he stayed from 1971 to 1978. When a job became available with the City of Lemon Grove, Butler was ready to return to the East County and Lemon Grove "looked like a nice place to work."

Being in on the ground floor of a new city was also an enticement to Butler, "There's a big advantage to being in on the beginning, of course there were a lot of headaches also," he admitted. "We had a lot of citizen input to help us in the early days and the character of Lemon Grove was pretty well shaped."

These days, most of the community development department's concern is with in-fill in areas that are more difficult to develop and the recycling of previously developed land.

"There have been a lot of good positive changes downtown and the image of the community has advanced," said Butler, "I'm very pleased with the things I've seen here recently."

Butler and his wife, Patrice, who is a marriage and family counselor, have one daughter, Lisa, who is a second year student at the University of California Santa Cruz. When he isn't spending time with his family, Butler said he likes hiking in the back country and pursuing his interest in photography.

A Parent-Teacher Contract

by Joseph Walker

To my child's new teacher:

You and I have never met, but within a few months we'll probably feel like we know everything there is to know about each other. I'll know all about your priorities, prejudices and peccadilloes; you'll know about mine. Or at least, we'll think we do. And all because we have just one thing in common.

My daughter.

My wife and I have been trying to teach her for almost nine years now. Other teachers have been involved with her at school and at church. It hasn't always been easy, and we haven't always been successful. But now it's your turn. You get nine months to work your magic on Andrea.

She's excited. And believe me, no one wants you to succeed more than I do.

The way I see it, we're on the same team. We just have different roles. You're in charge of math, science, history and how to turn a standard sheet of paper into the world's largest and most unusual snowflake.

My wife and I are in charge of character development, values orientation, nutrition and personal hygiene.

The lines seem pretty clearly drawn. But they do overlap from time to time. For example, I'm not going to be able to help Andrea much with math or science--but I can diagram a mean sentence. And even though I wouldn't want you to teach Andrea how to pray, I do hope you'll attempt to correct any dishonesty, selfishness or thoughtlessness you encounter in her along the way.

See what I mean? Teamwork. And if we're both conscientious and do our part, we can help turn this bright, energetic, enthusiastic little girl into a dynamic, capable woman who is well prepared to make a significant contribution to society in whatever career she chooses--including homemaking.

But we could also mess things up for her, which is why I wanted to write to you. Maybe if we work a few things out right now at the start of the school year, we can avoid some of the difficulties that we might otherwise encounter. Think of it as a parent-teacher contract, with both of us making reciprocal promises--and with Andrea eventually emerging as the chief beneficiary.

I promise to take it easy on the sugar-coated cereals and sweet rolls for breakfast. How can you be expected to teach someone who is bouncing off the walls on a sugar high?

Meanwhile, you promise not to sugar-coat the educational process. The "Learning Can Be Fun" approach is great as long as the accent is on the learning, not the fun.

Don't be afraid to make her sweat a little. Let her struggle through some tough problems on her own. And please don't let her use the calculator until she knows how to do the calculations on paper.

I promise to keep the television off before school.

And no TV in the afternoon or evening until the homework is done. You promise not to rely too much on the television in the classroom.

Sure, I know it can be a helpful tool, but it seems to me that an important part of the educational experience is the give-and-take of human interaction. And I'm concerned that it's undermined the more we rely of TV as the "Great Dispenser of Information." If the educational program you want to show can take Andrea places where she's never been and show her things she's never seen, fine. But if it's just another talking head, I'd rather she hear it from you.

I promise to see to it that her religious instruction is taken care of at home and at church. I won't expect you to fortify her faith, or to avoid subjects that might challenge her thinking.

You promise not to assault her faith, or make her feel embarrassed because she believes that the world started with something more than a Big Bang.

I promise to teach her how to be a good citizen. We'll concentrate on things like sharing, being honest, working hard, respecting authority and getting along with others.

You promise to do everything you can to see that she isn't taken advantage of by classmates who don't have the same teaching at home.

I promise to ignore half of what she tells me about you. You promise to ignore half of what she tells you about us.

I promise not to question your authority or disciplinary decisions until I've had a chance to talk to you about them.

You promise not to question my authority or child-raising decisions unless you honestly believe that there's a problem at home that is affecting her performance at school. And then, please, come talk to me first.

I promise not to be defensive when you talk to me about a problem Andrea is having.

You promise to be honest enough to let me know when there is a problem. And not to be offended if I choose to handle it in a different way than you suggest.

I promise to make sure she's at school every day possible, and that she's ready to learn. That means I'll make sure she gets plenty of rest, the kind of food which she needs, and clothes which will keep her warm and won't distract her fellow students. And I promise, no keeping her home to baby sit or attend some frivolous outing.

You promise to be there for her when she needs you--educationally and emotionally.

I promise to respect you.

You promise to respect my child.

So, what do you think? Have we got a deal? Can we pull together to make a difference in the life of this one little girl? Nine months isn't very long, you know. But it's plenty long enough for parents and teachers who communicate and who care.

Sports Commentary

by John E. Wirges

Charger new faces, old promises, older story

The San Diego Padres and the San Diego Chargers really compliment each other. Each, in their own good time, prepares their fans for the disappointment and bitter taste of failure.

Maybe that is why we're such good sports about it. We take defeat in stride. It's as if we recognize the woeful inadequacy of our major league sportin' enterprises as part of the cost we must pay for the our pleasure of living in "Camelot by the sea."

For whatever reason, the National League pennant challenging Padres never got on track this season. They never gave up, but they never got started. How can you not love a team like that!

And then there's the Chargers.

Despite an expected whippin' at Cleveland Sunday, Charger players will enjoy at least one pleasure Brown players never experience: Charger players will be returning to San Diego. Even when the Browns win, the best they can do is Cleveland.

You'd figure that San Diego would have a chance against the Browns Sunday, but a couple of facts keep getting in the way of Charger cheering chances.

Cleveland coach Bud Carson ranted and raved at his behemoths all week after the Browns folded like a cheap suitcase against the New York Jets last Sunday.

"We had as bad a (first) half as you can possibly have," Carson said in disgust. The Browns were down 24 - 7 at the half and lost 24 - 21 in a game Cleveland figured to win.

You better believe the Browns will be ready for the laid-back loafers in Charger livery visiting this Sunday (TV-39 at 10 a.m.)

Oh, the Chargers (0-2 on the season) won the game of stats with more total offense (417 - 302 yards), more rushing and passing yards and more time in control of the ball. All Cincinnati had was an edge in the score, coming from behind to win 21-16.

The Charger defense took a 12th man on the field with a cheering crowd of loyally-vocal fans that stymied Bengal quarterback Boomer Esiason's no-huddle, "quickie," offense.

The only sour note was Charger rookie megabuck linebacker Junior Seau trying to wave the crowd to silence as they hooted and yelled Esiason's audible play calling into ineffectiveness.

When will that rich kid ever grow up?

The Cincinnati offense tried everything. When the no-huddle, quickie offense didn't work, they tried "moving pockets" passes that did work.

When that ploy was covered they went to quick opening plays. The Bengals tested Charger defenders with a well-designed offense that made adjustments to every San Diego defensive plan.

Charger coaches, on the other hand, failed in the late going with the same scheme they showed Bengal coaches in their successful drives early in the game. Cincinnati defenders adjusted, Charger offensive schemes did not. Listen to that Bengal purr.

What a way to begin a season. Two games, two losses in contests San Diego athletes played well enough to win. San Diego coaching came up short in both losses.

A fake punt give-away against Dallas and poor-to-no adjustment in the offensive design against Cincinnati earn a pair of "F's" for Charger head coach Dan Henning and his henchmen.

But give us a win on Sunday and we'll be right back riding the Charger Band Wagon.

Maybe that's what being a fan is all about.

Narrow Margin and Postcards From the Edge

"Narrow Margin"

Written and directed by Peter Hyams, ("The Presidio"), "Narrow Margin" stars Gene Hackman as a Los Angeles district attorney who tracks down the witness of an underworld slaying to persuade her to testify.

Finding the witness, (played by "Fatal Attraction" star Ann Archer), in a remote cabin in Canada, Hackman soon discovers that he isn't the only one pursuing her. Two ruthless mafia hit-men want to silence the prized witness, even if it means killing the D.A. in the process.

Hackman and Archer take refuge in the only available means of transportation, a train, and they begin a frantic struggle for survival, hoping to evade the thugs long enough for help to arrive.

Peter Hyams was up watching midnight movies one evening when he saw the 1952 film "The Narrow Margin." He liked the story so much that he bought the rights and planned an homage to the old train suspense movies of the 1940s and '50s. Indeed, his update is true to the same principals which added to locomotive mysteries: cramped passageways, darkened compartments, roof top brawling, and no way to get off!

Although the plot suffers a bit from reliance on the old formula, Hyams manages to keep the film exciting with brisk pacing and a few surprising twists.

Hackman and Archer are both good in their roles, but the characters weren't a stretch for either of them. Archer was your basic "why me?" damsel in distress, and Hackman simply adds on more to his list of tough guys. He does a fantastic job, as always, but I'm just getting to the point where I prefer his more intelligent, dramatic roles, as in "Postcards From the Edge," (see accompanying review).

When watching "Narrow Margin," consider the fact that Hackman and Archer did their own stunts, including hanging over the side of a train traveling at speeds over 50 mph, going over bridges and canyons. Knowing that the two stars were actually in real danger while filming adds to the film's nerve-racking suspense.

Critic's Rating: B

"Postcards From the Edge"

Boasting the most impressive ensemble cast since "Steel Magnolias," "Postcards From the Edge" features Meryl Streep, Shirley MacLaine, Dennis Quaid, Gene Hackman and Richard Dreyfuss, in a drama from actress-turned-screen writer, Carrie Fisher, based on her novel.

Streep is an aspiring actress caught between the pressures of show business and the powerful influence of her mother (MacLaine).

Unable to cope with either problem, she turns to drug-induced escapism as a means of relief. Barely able to finish her creative projects, including a role in a film by a prominent director (Hackman), Streep sinks lower into her drug binges, this time with a brash womanizer (Quaid), and takes a nearly fatal overdose of pills. The rest of the story follows her struggle to kick the habit and rebuild her career.

The acting is enjoyable, if not always excellent, with Streep and Hackman delivering the most powerful performances. Although Hackman's role is small, (the credits list him as making a "special appearance"), this is some of his finest dramatic acting. He captures the same endearing charm he had in Woody Allen's "Another Woman," which is his most under-rated performance. Somehow each of Hackman's scenes have a certain "glow" about them, especially when his character reconciles with Streep, and he is most deserving of an Academy Award nomination.

Other Oscar nods may come for Streep and MacLaine, Carrie Fisher and for director Mike Nichols.

Critic's Rating: A

Globe's "Hamlet" magnificent

by Robert Korbett

A young man returns from his university studies to attend the (unexpected) funeral of his father and finds his mother has married his uncle, who has, in turn, assumed the deceased king's throne. Something is rotten in Denmark, and Prince Hamlet must seek the resolve to his doubts about his familial affairs.

Globe Festival '90 closes its mainstage season with Shakespeare's tragedy in a magnificently mounted production superbly directed by Jack O'Brien, the Globe's artistic director.

In the title role, Campell Scott (Willy in the recent film, "Longtime Companion"), honors his royal (theater) lineage (as son of George C. and Colleen Dewhurst). He has the physical bearing, the regal carriage and manner, the intellectual brow and courtly wit of necessity to this beleaguered character.

By design, and abetted by personage, the usurper Claudius (Richard Easton) becomes much more a known factor. He wallows in luxurious excess, which is picked-up by the court, as his most demonstrative lust for newly-bedded spouse, Gertrude (Katherine McGrath). In his confessional scene, when admitting to himself his fratricide for "my crown, mine own ambition and my queen," there is little hope that Easton will jump up from his knees and beg for forgiveness.

As Polonius, Jonathan McMurty recreates his well-honed dottering instigator; fussy and full of fatherly advice.

Jonathan Waker's Laertes is a bit yuppie; quite a pleasing figure. With his sister, Ophelia (Jennifer Van Dyck), this is a joined family.

Van Dyck seems to have little leeway in her madness. Though she covers higher ranges of lunacy quite fully, the character is not allowed much transition, and so the audience is called upon to make a leap of faith with the girl.

For technical achievement, little is left undone. Ralph Funicello has designed a set with large glass panels angled from upstage towards the audience.

Lewis Brown's costume's were brilliant (Hamlet's shirt, the royal red robes, and Gertrude's gowns). All were perfectly lit by the masterful skill of lighting designer Perter Nardudin.

One has to be in the audience to appreciate this fine production. Performances continue Tuesday through Sunday at 8 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m. For reservations, contact the box office at 239-2255.

Banned books are cause for celebration at libraries

Most of the books of Judy Blume, the decade's most popular author for young people, have been banned, challenged or restricted in various schools and libraries across the United States as "profane, immoral and offensive." Those of Ernest Hemingway, James Baldwin and Stephen King have suffered similar attacks.

These books and others will be on display in many San Diego County Library branches during Banned Books Week, September 22 to 29.

"Banned Books Week is an opportunity for the County Library to promote an essential American right--the freedom to read," said Sue Dess, Chair of the library's Intellectual Freedom Committee.

"As a public library, it's very important for us to provide information on all subjects, including those that might be unpopular or controversial."

"Fortunately," Dess adds, "the County Library has faced very few challenges over the years. One reason is that it is generally recognized that our purpose as a public library is to enlighten the public by providing all points of view. Another is that the Library's "materials selection policy" states that parents are responsible for the reading matter their children bring home, not the library staff."

Books are challenged by groups and individuals for a variety of reasons. According to the American Library Association, most complaints are concerned with objectionable language, sex, religious preferences or racism.

In the 19th century, for example, "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" drew criticism for poking fun at conventional morality and for bad grammar. Later, in 1905, the New York Public Library excluded the classic from its children's room on the grounds that "Huck not only itched but scratched." In the last decade, the book has been challenged by civil rights groups around the world as racist.

Other books deemed dangerous in the past few years in this country are "The Color Purple," "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," "A Farewell to Arms," "The American Heritage Dictionary" and "To Kill A Mockingbird."

California is not exempt from censorship, said Dess.

In 1986, for instance, Nobel Prize winner Gabriel Garcia-Marquez's remarkable book, "One Hundred Years of Solitude," was purged from a high school in Wasco, California, as "garbage being passed off as literature."

And in 1989, Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses," created such an uproar that several local bookstores removed it from their shelves for "employee safety."

By bringing these challenges to light during "Banned Books Week," County Librarian Catherine Lucas said, "our purpose is to focus on the positive aspects of our First Amendment rights. We urge everyone to visit their County Library branch this week and celebrate the freedom to read."
